recently considerably more attention was paid to using forests to mitigate climate change through the absorption of carbon dioxide  $\text{CO}_2$  from the atmosphere than there was on considering the need to adapt forests to avoid the worst effects that climate change could have on them the switch from a mitigation heavy approach to one that considers adaptation in a more balanced manner underscores the need to have approaches to assess the vulnerability of forests to climate change one reason for this more balanced focus may be due to the realization by the broader public governmental organizations and the forest science community that the climate change that has already occurred is permanent in human terms because it takes centuries for much of the  $\text{CO}_2$  emitted from fossil fuel sources to be removed from the atmosphere there are already substantial impacts that are being seen in the world's forests these impacts are certain to continue increasing until  $\text{CO}_2$  emissions drop to lower levels for that reason adaptation of the world's forests requires attention the approaches to assessing vulnerability can be categorized according to the focus they each provide contextual vulnerability addresses current issues of climate and is usually evaluated using participatory techniques with people who live in or work with forests outcome vulnerability looks at the biophysical vulnerability of forests it is often used to assess the cause and effect of climate change on a biological system vulnerability assessments can be highly technical and quantitative using advanced computer programs and geographic information systems or they can be based on social science approaches to obtaining qualitative information from people this book written by three generations of rankings academics with considerable experience from three very different regions of the globe lifts the lid on the real impact of higher education ranking systems hers on universities and their stakeholders it critically analyses the criteria that make up the big three global ranking systems and using interviews with senior administrators academics and managers discusses their impact on universities from four very different continents higher education continues to be dominated by a reputational hierarchy of institutions that sustains and is reinforced by hers despite all the opinions and arguments about the legitimacy of the rankings as a construct it seems experts agree that they are here to stay the question therefore seems to be less about whether or not universities should be compared and ranked but the manner in which this is undertaken delivering a fresh perspective on global rankings this book summarizes the development of hers and provides a critical evaluation of the effects of hers on four different major regions south africa the arab region south east asia and australia it will appeal to any academic student university administrator or governing body interested in or affected by global higher education ranking ecological resources volume is indexed by Thomson Reuters CPCI-S. This book examines the much debated question of how to unleash the potential of young people with promising intellectual abilities and motivation. It looks at the increasingly important topic of excellence in education and the shift in focus towards the provision of programs to support talented students in higher education. It provides a systematic overview of programs for talented students at Northern European higher education institutions. HEIS starting in the Netherlands where nearly all HEIS have developed honors programs over the past two decades. The book explores three clusters of countries: the Benelux, the Nordic, and the German speaking countries. For each of these countries, it discusses the local culture towards excellence, the structure of the education system, and the presence of honors programs. In total, the book reviews the special talent provisions for nearly four million students at 303 higher education institutions in eleven countries. In addition, it offers an analysis of the reasons to develop such programs, a look into the future of honors education, and a practical list of suggestions for further research. The Sirius program assigned Marco Wolfensberger to carry out this research. This book introduces students on multiple criteria decision aiding and making courses to practical real world cases. Each case study introduces a problem or situation together with a method and a description and explanation of a computer application. In this sense, each chapter is based on four pillars: the problem, the model building, the methods, and their implementation. The book presents and elaborates a rich and comprehensive set of practical problems comprising multiple criteria including numerous approaches for their solution for decision support or decision aid. It complements traditional textbooks and lecture material by employing case studies to promote a deeper understanding of the investigated concepts and help students apply these methods.
